REPORT NO.

At the beginning of 1949, all office workers and employees of all shipyards in Yugoslavia were required to sign a written statement whereby they declared that:

- They would not visit any foreign exposition.
- They would not read any foreign newspaper, magazine, or similar material.
- They would have nothing to do with any foreigner, regardless of his nationality. If this were impossible, they must conduct any conversation with a foreigner in the manager's office in the presence of the manager and one member of the UDB.
- They would not conduct correspondence with people in other countries. If this were impossible, all correspondence, both incoming and outgoing, must be censored by the manager of the individual enterprise. Correspondence was permitted only with the closest members of each worker's family.
- They would be morally, materially, and criminally responsible for maintaining security concerning the work of the enterprise.
- They recognized that they would be judged by the Military Court of the Naval Command in Split for any breach of these obligations.
